FIAAP, VICTAM, GRAPAS Asia shows expand, move for 2012

FIAAP Asia, VICTAM Asia and GRAPAS Asia are all expanding and relocating for their 2012 shows, according to organizers.

The animal feed shows will be held at the Bangkok International Trade & Exhibition Centre Feb. 15 through 17, 2012.

FIAAP is dedicated to the specialty ingredients and additives used in the safe and cost-efficient formulation of animal feeds, aquafeed and dry pet foods. VICTAM focuses on specialty and ancillary equipment and technology for the production of animal feeds, aquafeed and dry pet foods. GRAPAS profiles the latest technology and systems for rice and flour milling, grain processing, preservation, storage and movement, noodle, breakfast cereal and extruded snack production.

India may double corn yields in next decade

India, Asia's second-largest corn grower, could double its corn yields over the next decade, according to reports.

India's corn acreage currently ranks fifth highest in the world at more than 8 million hectares, though the country's yields are among the lowest, ranging from 1 to 4.5 metric tons per hectare. But according to the Associated Chamber of Commerce and Industry of India, the country could consume 30 million metric tons of corn by 2020, more than 50% claimed by the poultry industry. "There is tremendous room for improvement and given the focus on the crop, yields could go up 6 to 8 (metric tons per hectare) in the next 10 years," said Hardeep Grewal, Asia-Pacific head of corn marketing for agrochemicals firm Syngenta.

About half of India's corn area uses traditional cultivation methods, which produce only about 1 metric ton per hectare. The remaining area, which uses high-yield seeds, yields about 4.5 metric tons per hectare from winter-sown crop and between 2.5 and 3 metric tons per hectare from summer-sown crop, said Grewal. "So one-fourth of the corn area in India is supplying one-half of the total production... [that] shows you that Indian small farmers are adopting technologies very quickly when they are in the market economy, when they have the ability to access good quality seeds, when they have the ability to sell their grains and they have the ability to get access to agronomic information."

A combination of factors such as poor access to credit, agronomic information and markets has kept productivity low and prevented Indian farmers from taking advantage of a growing global demand for corn. "As India looks into the next 15 years at its protein requirements, for animal protein, particularly for poultry and eggs, the demand for animal feed will go up, the demand for corn will go up," said Grewal. "It's vital that productivity is increased."

ADM closes soy processing plant in Illinois

Archer Daniels Midland Co. has closed its soybean processing plant in Galesburg, Ill., due to low profits and slow demand, according to the company.

“Several factors — including the growing soybean export market, the increasing cost of beans and a decrease in domestic demand for soybean meal — put severe pressure on the profitability of the Galesburg plant and drove the decision to close the facility,” said Roman Blahoski, ADM spokesman.

The plant has been idle since April. Some of the 31 plant workers will have the opportunity to transfer to other facilities, while processing operations will be absorbed into surrounding plants in Illinois, Iowa and Minnesota.

Neogen partners with USDA on E. coli research

Neogen Corporation’s GeneSeek subsidiary is a participant in U.S. Department of Agriculture-funded research that seeks to better understand the role cattle genetics may play in food contamination by the pathogen E. coli O157:H7.

Researchers have shown that while some cows have no E. coli O157:H7 in their systems, others present a greater risk for beef contamination by shedding higher concentrations of the pathogen in their feces. The existence of the pathogen does not cause illness in cattle, but E. coli O157:H7 is a significant cause of foodborne illness in humans.

The research is being conducted by University of Nebraska-Lincoln scientists, in partnership with the USDA’s Meat Animal Research Center in Clay Center, Neb., and GeneSeek. GeneSeek will perform genotyping on the cattle genetic samples.

US corn forecast drops 556 million bushels

Ending corn stocks are expected to sit at roughly 714 million bushels.

U.S. corn production for 2011-2012 is forecast 556 million bushels lower than previous estimates, with a reduction in harvested area and lower expected yields, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s latest World Agricultural Supply and Demand Estimates.

The national average yield is forecast at 153 bushels per acre, down 5.7 bushels from July’s projection as unusually high temperatures and below-average precipitation across much of the Corn Belt sharply reduced yield prospects.

Total projected corn use for 2011-2012 has been reduced by 340 million bushels. Feed and residual use is projected 150 million bushels lower, reflecting the smaller crop and higher expected prices. Corn use for ethanol is projected 50 million bushels lower with tighter supplies and lower forecast gasoline consumption for 2011 and 2012.

Projected corn exports for 2011-2012 are reduced by 150 million bushels, with wheat feeding expected to increase. Ending stocks are projected 156 million bushels lower at 714 million. The stocks-to-use ratio is projected at 5.4%, compared with July’s projection of 6.4%. The season-average farm price is projected at $6.20 to $7.20 per bushel, up 70 cents on each end of the range.

U.S. wheat supplies for 2011-2012 have also been lowered, by 30 million bushels, as higher forecast winter wheat production is more than offset by lower area and production for durum and other spring wheat, according to the report. Total use for 2011-2012 has been lowered by 30 million bushels with a reduced outlook for exports, more than offsetting an increase in expected feed and residual use. Exports are projected down 50 million bushels with increased competition, particularly from FSU-12 countries, where production prospects are raised.

Projected feed and residual use is raised by 20 million bushels, reflecting a continuation of competitive prices for feed-quality wheat and lower projected corn supplies. Ending stocks are nearly unchanged.

The 2011-2012 season-average farm price for all wheat is projected at $7.00 to $8.20 per bushel, up from July’s range of $6.60 to $8.00 per bushel, supported by higher projected prices for corn.

Provimi acquisition will not alter US consolidation plans

Provimi's acquisition by Cargill will not affect Provimi's plans to consolidate its U.S. headquarters in Brookville, Ohio, according to Mark Poeschl, group vice president.

Provimi has made plans to close its Lewisburg, Ohio, offices and move 45 employees to the newly expanded Brookville headquarters. The relocation was planned months before Cargill's announcement that it would buy Provimi, and the move is still expected to be completed by the end of 2011.

China corn demand surpasses US estimates

China ordered 21 million bushels of U.S. corn in July, more than the U.S. allotted for exports to China in all of 2011, as the country's pork market and middle class both grow.

China had bought another 2.2 million bushels of corn from the U.S. halfway through the month of August, and the country became a net importer of corn for the first time in 15 years in 2010. Some U.S. economists believe that China might become the biggest foreign buyer of U.S. corn within five to 10 years, taking the spot from Japan, which bought 610 million bushels of U.S. corn in 2010. "We think this is the inflection point," said Brian Schouvieller, a grain marketing executive at CHS Inc. "We believe that, from now, China is going to be a steady buyer."

Current U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates suggest that China will import 79 million bushels of corn from all sources in the 2011-2012 crop year.

Feed association urges clarification on cash recordkeeping rules

The National Grain and Feed Association has called on the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to clarify and narrow a proposed recordkeeping rule that could require grain elevators, feed mills, grain processors and others to record all communications, including telephone conversations, with farmers and other commercial firms that ultimately result in cash or cash-forward contract transactions.

The CFTC's proposal would require records of "all oral and written communication provided or received concerning quotes, solicitations, bids, offers, instructions, trading and prices that lead to the execution of transactions in a commodity interest or cash commodity, whether communicated by telephone, voicemail, facsimile, instant messaging, chat rooms, electronic mail, mobile device or other digital or electronic media."

The NGFA has expressed concern that such requirements would be burdensome and costly, as well as create challenges with existing technology systems. "At the least, we urge the agency to adopt a generous timeline and flexible attitude toward implementation for futures commission merchants and introducing brokers, especially smaller firms for which short-term adoption of the proposed standards may pose a significant investment," said the NGFA.

Syngenta sues grain supplier over GMO corn rejection

Syngenta Seeds has filed suit against the North American grain operations of Bunge for refusing to accept a genetically modified type of Syngenta's corn designed to protect the crop against insect damage.

Syngenta said Bunge has singled out its corn, stating elevators cannot accept the grain because they don't have necessary international approval from major export destinations. Syngenta said the action is illegal and that it has approvals for export to "major" export destinations, including Australia, Brazil, Canada, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, the Philippines, Korea and Taiwan.

beyond ingredients

At Nutriad we go far beyond just providing feed ingredients. We start by listening to the dairy producer and recognizing their current feed and management program needs. Then our experienced and innovative team develops a targeted solution using our application expertise and “applying nature” approach to optimize user benefit. From Dairy Krave® that provides consistent taste profiles, to Apex® that incorporates known benefits of specific plant extracts or Adi-Flow which minimizes stresses related to production, reproduction and environmental issues, Nutriad delivers. Anyone can provide an ingredient...Nutriad gives you a system of species-specific solutions that are right for today and tomorrow.

MADE IN THE USA

PepSoyGen is a functional soy protein ingredient from solid-state fermentation technology. Solid-state fermentation is an all-natural, efficient manufacturing process that significantly increases the protein content of PepSoyGen, while eliminating the anti-nutritional factors in soy. Patented strains of Aspergillus oryzae and Bacillus subtilis remain viable in the finished product, providing a valuable source of direct-fed microbials. PepSoyGen is backed by university research and is a consistent, quality protein source.

Are the benefits you expected from your pellet binder real... or just an illusion?

If all the claims made by the salesperson for the newest or cheapest pellet binder have turned out to be mostly smoke and mirrors, ask your LignoTech representative about Ameri-Bond 2X.

Lignin-based Ameri-Bond 2X is the strongest pellet binder you can buy. When added to feed, it improves pellet durability and reduces fines by up to 50 percent – all the while increasing production rates and reducing energy usage.

For more information, visit our website at www.ltus.com and click on Animal Nutrition. Because improving your feed pelleting process is all about industry-leading technology, not magic.
